AUDITOR OF THE COURT OF SESSION

PARLIAMENT HOUSE, EDINBURGH, EH1 1RQ RUTLAND EXCHANGE No. 304 031 225 2595 Extr. 306

At the request of Messrs. Shepherd & Wedderburn W.S. in terms of Regulation 17(3) of The Advice and Assistance (Scotland) Regulations 1987, the Auditor has considered the Business Accounts submitted to The Scottish Legal Aid Board in the cases of No. 63/01/758116/87) and (Ref. No. 63/03/882373/88) and at a diet of taxation he has heard representations by the solicitors and on behalf of the Board. It being agreed that the fees and outlays in the said Accounts are correctly stated and in accordance with the provisions of Regulation 16(1) of the said Regulations, the Auditor taxes the accounts at the sums of NINETY TWO POUNDS AND TWENTY EIGHT PENCE (£92.28) in the case of and of ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY POUNDS (£120.00) (being the restricted amount in terms of Regulation 16(2)) in the case of To each of the said sums, there will fall to be added Value Added Tax.

EDINBURGH. 7th December, 1988.

Note by the Auditor of the Court of Session on questions arising on Section 10 of the Legal Aid (Scotland) Act 1986 and Regulation 11 of The Advice and Assistance (Scotland) Regulations 1987.

A firm of solicitors acted for client A who qualified for advice and assistance under Part II of the Legal Aid (Scotland) Act 1986. period of their actings, 29th June 1987 to 16th October 1987 (when the client consulted other agents), was covered by The Advice and Assistance (Scotland) Regulations 1987. The financial limit authorised by the Scottish Legal Aid Board was £150, increase to that figure being granted in response to the solicitors' application for an increase to £200. solicitors submitted an account for £92.28 covering the whole of their work for the client. The Board offered £58.62 being the whole amount of the charges sought under exception only of all charges for work carried out between the point in time at which the charges amounted to a total of £50 until the point in time at which the Board increased the limit to £150. The solicitors sought taxation of their account in terms of Regulation 17(3). The Board declined to associate itself with the reference to the Auditor.

The solicitors also acted for client B, in his case bringing the matter to a satisfactory conclusion. The increase in limit authorised was to £120. The account submitted set out proper charges for their whole work: it amounted to £196.58 but that figure was shown to be restricted to £120, of which sum the solicitors requested payment. The Board offered £83.70 being the amount of the account under exception of all charges for work carried out (as in the case of client A) between the moment at which £50 of charges had accrued to the time when the Board authorised the increase in the limit to £120. The solicitors sought taxation.

For the Board it was contended at the diet of taxation by their representative of the charges in question lay in Section 10 of the Legal Aid (Scotland) Act 1986 which provides, by subsection (1)(b):

(The solicitor) "shall not give (advice and assistance)... so as to exceed the limit except with the approval of the Board".

The limit referred to is, by subsection 2, the initial limit there set at £50. Regulation 71 of The Advice and Assistance (Scotland) Regulations 1987 sets out the machinery for obtaining approval for an increased limit.

The Board takes the view, and has always in practice proceeded upon the view that subsection 10(1)(b) of the act required that work involved in giving advice and assistance to a value in excess of £50 did not qualify for payment if it was carried out before an increase in the limit had been approved by the Board. Although the Board's view would have been reinforced if the word "approval" in the Section had been preceded by the word "prior", no other interpretation of the legislation was tenable given that the subsection addressed itself in terms to the doing of work by the solicitor and not to his qualifying thereby for remuneration from the Legal Aid Fund. Furthermore, Mr Anderson submitted, nowhere was there any indication that approval could have retrospective effect.

Mention/

Mention was made of the earlier provisions in this same matter which had in terms required prior approval of those then responsible for the administration of the Fund, the Legal Aid Central Committee of the Law Society of Scotland (see The Advise and Assistance (Scotland) Regulations 1972, Regulation 5(5). Mr Anderson also pointed to the publication by the Board in the journal of the Law Society (issue of September 1987) of its view and its intended application of that view.

For the solicitors, Mr D.I.K. MacLeod, W.S., submitted that as matter of statutory interpretation, it was not legitimate so to read a provision made by the legislature as if it contained a word accepted to be essential for the precise meaning sought to be put upon it, when that word could readily have been added by the legislature itself. that cardinal proposition required any buttressing (which Mr MacLeod maintained that it did not), such support was readily available: he pointed to the stipulation of expressly prior approval in regulations made under this same Act - Regulation 14(1) of the Criminal Legal Aid (Scotland) Regulations 1987; Regulation 21(1) of The Civil Legal Aid (Scotland) Regulations 1987; and Regulation 12(1) of these same Advice and Assistance Regulations 1987. The position of the Board in this matter was weakened rather than strengthened by the specification of "prior approval" in the 1972 Regulations referred to: what was significant was that in the present Regulation the "prior" qualification had been departed from. For such relevance as it might have, it was to be noted that, as conceded by and as was indeed general knowledge in the legal profession, the Central Committee itself had not in practice insisted on such prior approval, although it was accepted on both sides that the Board is not bound at all by the practice of its predecessors.

Mr. MacLeod further contended that if the Board's interpretation of the subsection were correct, it led to consequences which were totally unacceptable to the Law of Scotland and in political terms inconceivable. If the Board was correct, Parliament required a solicitor providing advice and assistance to his client in terms of the Act, to stop short as soon as that charging clock struck £50, to lay down his pen, to break off the interview or the telephone call, reporting to his client that as his funding had ceased, he the solicitor was forbidden to do any further work for him meanwhile until the Board should feed the meter with further financial auth-In the meantime his duty as solicitor to take reasonable care for his client's interest was statutorily discontinued as Sections 10 and 11 of the Act, taken together, had the effect of preventing him from acting further in the matter on the normal professional basis. However ludicrous that scenario might be as matter of general law, Mr MacLeod submitted, it was also in direct conflict with Section 31 of the Act which provided by subsection (7)

"Except in so far as expressly provided under this Act, the fact that the services of counsel or a solicitor are given by way of legal aid or advice and assistance shall not affect the relationship between or the respective rights in that connection of counsel, solicitor and client."

As it happened, the cases before the Auditor were not ones in which action had been critically necessary for the clients at the moment when the work for them had brought the charges over the limit, but in each it could fairly be said that continuing work immediately beyond that point had been desirable from the client's point-of-view/point-of-view and reasonable as seen by the solicitor.

This consideration was referred to who explained that at the present time the Board was managing to process expeditiously applications for increased authority (and in this respect, significantly improving its performance record). But he agreed that the Board was not in a position to undertake that applications for increases in authorised expenditure would always be so processed as to eliminate the possibility of prejudice to the client's interests if solicitors were forbidden to act at all while an application was under consideration.

The solicitors submitted that Section 10 fell to be read as relating rather to the qualifications of solicitors for remuneration for their services than to the performance of service for the client in accordance with their recognised legal duty; and that "shall not give (advice and assistance) so as to exceed that limit..." is properly to be read as "shall not carry out work so as to qualify for payment in excess of that limit..." In the present cases, they had qualified for payment which was not in excess of the limit as approved in each case and in one of them had demonstrated the acceptance of restriction of their remuneration to that limit notwithstanding their performance of work to which greater charges could properly be attached.

The Auditor is of opinion that the Scottish Legal Aid Board has misdirected itself in interpreting Section 10(1)(b) as if the word "prior" appeared before "approval". If a solicitor has carried out work for a client within the period in which the client is in receipt of advice and assistance in pursuance of Part II of the Act, he is entitled to recover such fees therefor and such outlays as are appropriate and in accordance with Section 10(3) up to the amount of, but not exceeding, the limit authorised by the Board notwithstanding that part of the work shall have been done prior to the soliciton's receipt of advice from the Board of such authority. While the terms in which Section 10(1)(b) is couched are in the Auditor's opinion quite peculiarly infelicitous, he is not prepared to follow the Board in an interpretation from which it necessarily follows that pending the Board's approval of an increase in authorised expenditure, the solicitor is relieved of his duty under the Law to his client and the client is cut off from the protection afforded him by his engagement of a solicitor. The preferred interpretation does not require the importation of a significant feature presently not expressed; it leaves intact the solicitor's duty to the accepted client (which has never depended upon any certainty of remuneration) and the protection of the client sought to be assured by Section 31(7); it secures for the public funds administered by the Board the restriction to the limits of cost which the Board has itself set; and it reins the solicitor back from excessive work during the period of the Board's consideration of his application for an increase in funds by making payment for any work done then dependent on the success of the application. Further the preferred interpretation does not involve any element of retrospectivity. In Subsection 10(1)(b) "approval" can only be read as/

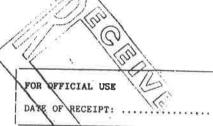

as relating to "advice and assistance". But the Board does not approve of solicitors' work: if it were doing so, subsequent approval would indeed require to be retrospective to validate work done earlier. But as the Regulations make clear, what the Board approves of is a solicitor's application for an increase in the limit: if the Board does approve of the application, its act is to increase the limit, or perhaps to authorise an increase in the limit. An increased limit, or an authorised increase in the limit, defines a quantity: it does not require to be a retrospective increase or a retrospective authority to allow the quantity to embrace past work as well as future: work done in giving advice and assistance falls within the permitted quantity without any necessary relationship in time between the doing and the defining of the quantity.

The two accounts are accordingly taxed at £92.28 and £120.00 respectively, the said sums being exclusive of VAT.
